

THE HAUNTED BACHELOR.

A PARODY.
(From the House Journal.)
Once upon a midnight stormy, a lone bachelor Attorney Pondered many a curious volume of his heart's forgotten lore;
While he nodded, nearly sleeping, suddenly there came a rapping.

As at some one gently rapping, rapping at his chamber door, "Tis the spirit!" he started, "rapping at my chamber door."
"Oh, for help! I'm frightened sore."

Then into his chamber flitting, not even once permitting He should see the cause, or should get behind the door, Came the spirit, as if from a broken, (with many a ring, and other's) arch,
And then down beside him on the dusty, book-strewn floor,
Sat there down amid the volumes of most venerable lore.

"It must be something serious, this is certainly mysterious, Quite an advent of the spirit,--a resurrection con amore, But I understand them inwardly--here there came a rap so ghostly
That he could no more dissemble as he had done heretofore, And his face grew pale and paler, and he started for the door, Down he fell on the floor.

Then there came a clatter, clatter, and his teeth began to chatter,
As the spirit gathered round him, and accused him very vexing, How with handsome face all smiling, and with winning words beguiling,
He had charmed away the senses of fair maidens by the score,
And each lass had fondly fancied, that 'twas he he did adore.

"Quoth the lawyer, 'Nevermore!' Startled at the stillness broken by reply so aptly spoken, For the answer, strange enough, quite a revelance bore, There began a noisy rapping, sort of spiritual clapping, While the lawyer thought could be but a fashionable encore,
And, again, as if he saw in that one word he would out-pour, Did he grow out 'Nevermore!'

Presently his soul grew stronger, hesitating then no longer, "Oh," said he, "Sweet Spirits, truly your forgiveness I implore,
On my knees, to every ghost, who to Love has played the hoaxer,
I will promise to recant the many falsehoods I swore; Will you promise then to leave me?" (here he pointed to the door).

Rapped the spirits "Nevermore!"
"Be that word our sign of parting," said the hapless wight, upstarting,
"Hie ye hence into the darkness, seek ye out some distant shore!"
In the noisy camp or forum, in the lonely, lone sanatorium, Such ghastly, grim, ungodly guests were never seen before, Leave my loneliness unbroken! (here he opened wide the door).

Rapped the spirits "Nevermore!"
So these virgin guests of evil, spirits still, though most unkind, They will never leave the lawyer, though in tears he
implore,
At his false heart ever tapping, they are rapping, rapping,
And he often sighs, "Oh, could I but recall the days of yore, I would fain, oh, nevermore!"

MR. PAINE'S DISCOVERY CORROBORATED BY EXPERIMENT.--Under this caption, we find in the Scientific American of to-day, a communication from Geo. Mathiot, dated Washington, July 27th. Be it premised that the Scientific American is a highly respectable, and well established publication, which has hitherto exhibited great distrust of Mr.
Paine and his pretensions. It informs us that Mr. Mathiot is electro-metallurgist, attached to the United States Coast Survey; that "he possess a vast amount of practical scientific knowledge;" and that the light, which is claimed to have been produced "was seen by the scientific gentlemen attached to the Survey." To test the decomposition or absorption of the turpentine used in imparting highly illuminating powers to hydrogen, Mr.
Mathiot held the hydrogen from the generating bottle by a bent tube dipping under the turpentine in a separate bottle. The light was very brilliant; in intensity between the Drummond light and the solar lamp. A spirit gas light looked as dingy alongside of it as ordinary lights appear by the light light. The taking of a daguerreotype by it would have been very easy. Mr. Mathiot says:

"I next directed my attention to ascertain the quantity of turpentine used along with a known quantity of hydrogen. I first accurately measured a portion of turpentine, and then passed the gas from thirty-three ounces of zinc through it, burning the gas at the jet all the time. I then measured the turpentine and found it not perceptibly less than before.
Now, in this case, the hydrogen could not have been changed into carburetted hydrogen for coal gas contains from four to five times as much carbon as hydrogen, and pure carburetted hydrogen has six times as much carbon as hydrogen; and as thirty-three ounces of zinc, by solution, liberate one ounce, or twelve cubic feet of hydrogen, therefore from four to five ounces of turpentine should have been used up, supposing it to be all carbon; but turpentine is composed of twenty atoms of carbon to fifteen atoms of hydrogen, and consequently only one-seventh of its carbon can be taken up by the hydrogen; or in other words, forty-two ounces of turpentine will be required to carburett one ounce of hydrogen."

"Yet still thinking that some portion of the turpentine might have evaporated, I cooled the bottle with the turpentine, and placed the whole apparatus in a cold bath, and tried the experiment again, but the light was the same.
I then heated the turpentine to 120 degrees, and then passed the hydrogen through it, but the light was the same. I then took a half gallon tincture bottle, and put in nearly three-quarters of a pint of turpentine, and let the pipe from the hydrogen generator run quite to the bottom of the water, the light appearing the same or a little better. I have used the same lot of turpentine in all these experiments, having had a brilliant light for about three hours; and the turpentine though frequently poured from one bottle to another, is not a tea-spoonful less than before I began the first experiment."

"I have now announced to you the simple facts of the matter: the rationale I leave to the scientific world. The next step after ascertaining that hydrogen can be used for illumination, is whether the light is according to its weight or its bulk, as compared with coal gas--that is, whether two hundred feet of this catalyzed hydrogen, will go as far for light as two hundred feet of coal gas, or whether it will require two hundred feet, one pound of hydrogen to do the work of twenty-six feet, one pound of coal gas."

Upon the above statement the Scientific American remarks:--"All the certificates and letters published by Mr. Paine's friends have no value at all in comparison of this of Mr. Mathiot." A correspondent, Mr. E.
L. Brown, states that he has made the above experiment, and succeeded perfectly in carbureting, (or rather as he thinks in catalyzing) the hydrogen with cold spirits of turpentine. He showed us a sketch of the apparatus used by him, which is so simple that any person having a slight knowledge of chemistry can make the experiment.--Boston Transcript, August 12.

THE DIARY OF THE HIPPOPOTAMUS.--As many of our country readers naturally feel anxious to know how the hippopotamus passes his time in a strange land, where he is so far away from his home, and all his relations, we have gone to the expense of procuring the following particulars, which are now printed for the first time:

The hippopotamus generally gets up about six The first thing he does is to wag his tail; he then grunts, nodding his head all the while at the Arabian, which is his peculiar method of saying "Good Morning!" At seven he has a pile of porridge and maize, which he prefers to tea or coffee. After that he washes his hands--his feet we mean--in the tank, which is put in his room as his washhand basin. He sleeps till ten, when he turns out to receive his numerous company, that are always waiting to see him. He takes several rounds in the park, which is attached to his dwelling house, bowing to his guests politely as he passes along. After this exertion he lies down in the hottest patch of sand he can pick out, and curling himself up till he looks like an immense ball of India-rubber, he goes fast asleep. He rarely wakes up till the latter part of the day, when his first thought is to go and tap at the door of the giraffe, who hang out in the next room to him. This act of civility over, he takes his bath, which sometimes lasts some two or three hours. During this time very little more than his nostrils are visible above the water. The fact is that the hippopotamus is of a modest retiring disposition, and likes to hide himself as much as possible from the public eye.

At six o'clock he leaves his bath and retires to his bed room. He never sees any one after six. A small bucket of porridge and maize of which he is amazingly fond is brought to his bedside, and the Arab boy feeds him with a spoon. After this he generally feels very sleepy, and lies down. He lays his head on the Arab's lap, and throwing his legs round his neck, is very quickly in the arms of Morpheus.

THE GREAT BULL FROM NINEVEH.--The lovers of art will be pleased to hear that the Great Bull, with upwards of a hundred tons of sculpture, excavated by our enterprising countryman, Dr. Layard, are now on their way to England, and may be expected in the course of September. In addition to the Elgin, Phigalian, Lycian, and Boodroom marbles, our Museum will soon be enriched by a magnificent series of Assyrian sculptures. It is said that Nineveh the French government are determined to excel us in the exhibition of Assyrian works of art, in order to compensate the comparative deficiency which the Louvre is possessed in the other great catalogues, and that accordingly large sums have been voted for the expenses of excavation. A drawing which represents the shipping of the sculpture has been just brought in by one of the Messrs. Lynch, of Bagdad, who has been with Dr. Layard exploring the remains of Nineveh. It represents the action of placing the Great Bull on board the Apprentice, at Morrighill, on the right bank of the Euphrates, about three miles above the old city of Bussorah. This place long formed the country residence of colonel Taylor, lately the political agent of this country at Bagdad and Bussorah, and is now rented by Messrs. Stephen Lynch & Co., to the Hon. East India Company as a depot for their vessels on the Euphrates. Alongside the Apprentice is the Nicotris steamer, under the command of Captain Jones, I. N., whose influence with the natives is most powerful, and whose assistance the success in effecting the difficult operation on the muddy banks of the Euphrates is in a great measure attributable. The Apprentice was sent out from this country by Mr. Alderman Findis, at the instance of the trustees of the British Museum, and to that gentlemen, and his nephews, Messrs Lynch, the public are indebted for a periodical communication between the Thames and the Euphrates.--

THE USE OF A LIFE PRESERVER.--The other day, as the passenger train of cars on the Mad River and Lake Erie railroad was about leaving Springfield for Sandusky, a green looking specimen of humanity, apparently from the backwoods, with long, lank limbs, encased in corduroy pantaloons only about half way below the knees, socks, the tops of which looked as if they were straining every nerve to reach the bottom of the pantaloons, a blue coat with large metal buttons, cut after what was the fashion some ten years since, made his appearance, and took a seat in a passenger car. As the train started he took out a very large life-preserver, blew it up, and deliberately fastened it round his waist, and seated himself with a self-satisfied air, as much as to say "my life is now safe." Hearing a general titter on all sides among the passengers, he cast his eyes around, and was greatly astonished to notice that they were all without life-preservers. The laugh continuing some twenty minutes, and apparently at him, he finally "took," and proceeded to take off his lifepreserver, looking very much like a dog caught stealing sheep.--Sandusky Mirror.

"He asked me to go into his henery," said Mrs. Partington while recording the story of a visit to an amateur farmer. "Go into your henery said I. I declare I was never so decomposed in my life. If I had an eye like an obelisk I should have struck him dead, I really believe I should." "I mean my hen-house," said he, smiling; "O said I that's another thing; and we went out into a large copse yard, and there they were in a nice looking house in the corner, layer upon layer--such a sight of 'em--Malarias and Shady and Dorcas--gracious! I can't remember the names of half of 'em."
"And the Solon geese, aunt," said like, who had heard the whole story. "Yes, and the Solon geese, too, blockhead," said she, "and if you knowed as much as they do, you'd be more credit to all of us."

SCIENTIFICALLY COOL.--A love smitten professor in one of our colleges, after conversing a while with his dulcinea on the interesting topic of matrimony, concluded at last with a declaration, and put the emphatic question of--
"Will you have me?"
"I am sorry to disappoint you," said the lady "and I must answer, No."
"Well, well, that will do, madam," said he in a quiet, low voice, "and now suppose we change the subject."
